The Health of the Human Body Compared to a Computer Set Up

Nuclear fission is merely a chain reaction on a small scale. Reincarnation is a chain reaction on man-size scale. The changing universe is but the same chain reaction on a large scale. It is all a repeated pattern. When the exact repeated pattern is disturbed, no matter in which size scale, then there is trouble. The same as with a computer, disk drive, monitor and printer, so is it with the chain of command in nuclear fission. If one link is out of place there is trouble.

This compares also with the health of a human body. The mental, emotional, physical and spiritual bodies can be compared exactly to the computer set-up, The operator of the set-up is you. Your messages to the computer are, in turn, given to the disk drive for storage, (your seedcore) and can be brought back to your present reality at any time. They also can be expressed in a reflected manner (monitor) and in a concrete manifestation (printer.) Any time wrong input occurs, it breaks the chain reaction between the integrated circuits and the operator of the system This then brings trouble.

In some of these examples the trouble is in the form of inaction. In some cases it is in the form of illness and in some it is in the form of explosion. Now if all these "trouble" expressions are drawn together into one explanation, you will have the causes of cancer explained. Then retrace all the steps of input to output and you will find the answer to prevention, not cure. The cure is an entirely different matter.

Once the chain reaction has started it is very difficult to stop. There must be a planned blockage put into the path of the chain reaction, in front of it, ahead of it - far enough ahead of it that the chain reaction has time to sense that there is some trouble ahead that will block it and it begins to slow down (remission) as it approaches this blockage. It would be more effective if it did not slow down as the impact at fast speed would shatter and demolish. Slowing it (remission) only serves to keep it intact and healthy although blocked as it does not hit the blockage and shatter.

The Sixth Chakra, (The Third Eye) Compared to the Antennae on an Insect

The third eye does have a bearing on the external vision, although this is not generally known. The internal vision takes strain off of the physical eyesight. It is as antennae work on an insect. It reaches out in front of the physical being and "senses" the environment and atmosphere and the other people around one and the obstacles and dangers present and feeds this knowledge into the brain which in turn alerts the physical eyes.

Raising the Energy Compared to a Shadow

Raising the energy vibrations of anything transforms it into good or positive vibrations. Care must be taken that this does not happen too fast in any instance or with anything, as too fast a rise in vibratory rate could be destructive. It must be a slow, gradual, steadily controlled increase with platforms of no movement spaced at intervals to allow for the "catching up" of the aura. Consider it as a shadow that gets longer as the day continues. As the sun moves across the sky the shadow lengthens. Then as night falls there is a pause in the movement, the shadow has a chance to catch up and in the morning the shadow is ahead of the form. The same thing with a human. If he progress rapidly, the aura lags behind. Then he must have a pause or rest to "tread water" (night) to allow the aura to catch up and even pass him by to then be ahead of him and help him catch up. Then his evolvment surges forward ahead of the aura, then another pause is needed. This is the way all education should take place on the earth plane. This should be studied and worked into the education system of our schools. At the very least it should be explained to those on the spiritual path. These pauses or treading of water, or nighttime rest are very necessary for a balanced rise in vibrations. Most people do not want to take the time for these pauses and cause too rapid a rise in their vibratory rate which is self-defeating.

Energy Flow in Body Compared to a Train

A healer must become so sensitive to the feel of the vibration of the colors of the different chakras, for instance red, that they can trace the flow of the energy from this chakra with their fingertips as it makes its circular course through the body. The energy must flow from the chakra through its previously mapped out route and back to the chakra. On its journey it not only nourishes others on its way, but receives nourishment itself from others. If there is an illness or point of disease in the body, this journey is interrupted and the energy doesn't flow, nourished, back to the chakra. It drains or seeps back the same route it started out on.

Compare it to a train that leaves the station to complete a circular route into a big city and back again to the station it left from. Picture this train as perhaps traveling half of its route and finding a bridge out. It cannot go forward and cannot turn around. The only thing it can do is coast back to the station and try the trip again the next day, hoping the bridge is repaired. It will try this trip every day to see if the bridge is repaired and in the process be putting excessive wear and tear on something that wasn't built to operate in reverse, only in forward gear. Therefore, the train itself will wear out much sooner than it should, because of the broken bridge.
